Air Force Recruiter

By SSgt Ernest T. Parker

Long green, Iron men. Cartwheel. Pony?

How many of these words do you recognize as dealing with money? These and other descriptive words were used by servicemen some thirty years ago to describe the money they received monthly in a pay line.

The pay, the method of payment and the slang have changed since the Air Force was established on September 18, 1947 as a separate branch of the Armed Forces.

Bread, check, funds, cash, dough and coins are words most often used by many airman around paydays today in describing the U. S. Treasury check delivered by the postman to their home or bank twice a month.

Gone are the end-of-month long lines when in 1947 an enlisted recruit would draw $75.47 which he called bucks, jacks, beans, salt, dust, and bones, among other names. The new second lieutenant drew 180 thick ones (dollars).

Treasury checks drawn on the Air Force account for a single enlisted man or woman on 1 October 1977 increased to $397.50 in base pay or $564.60 per month with allowances. With dependents, the figure tops six century notes by two ten spots, a fiver and some dust, or 20 cents in change.

A college graduate, commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Air Force, now starts at $732.90 in base pay funds. Augmented with long green folding money for quarters and rations allowances for single officers, this sum thickens to almost a grand a month ($941.29) or $986.23 with dependents.

An Air Force colonel will recall the 180 thick ones he began to draw when first commissioned 30 years ago. For this 30-plus years of honorable service, which spanned two wars, the colonel will draw 2,000 velvet ones (dollars without effort) at the end of each month.

Departure from the Air Force for those who have served for as long as the Air Force is old remember the reference to money in words like clinkers, horse nails, iron men, chips and rocks. A retired chief master sergeant, for example, will draw down some $1,200 worth of them each month.

Many who collect the velvet ones will tell those who are thinking about joining up for a four-year hitch or a career that it's a tough and challenging vocation. It has been described by some as requiring a kind of dedication and commitment like "something akin to a calling of the highest order" and demands self-disciplined, productive people working together to ensure the preservation of the American way of life.

The also will say it is a "Great Way of Life," as the Air Force recruiting posters proclaim.

Some 78,000 people will check out this claim between 1 October and 30 September 1978. After four or more many will decide to leave the Air Force way of life to pursue a similar civilian trade. Others will continue to serve their country long enough to retire in 1998 at twenty years or in 2008 at 30 years.

Entitlements, as they are referred to today, like free medical and dental care, 30 days a year paid vacation and others, when combined with long green provide an attractive incentive for those who can qualify and maintain the high standards of conduct expected of today's airmen.

In return, a respectable amount of bread is offered. Maybe not enough to make today's airman turn a cartwheel in a joyous gesture on bread days, but enough salt to make service to country more desirable.

If you are interested in more information about Air Force money matters, or other opportunities, call or visit your Air Force recruiter. He will tell you that a pony is a 25 lira note and a cartwheel is a silver dollar.

PROTECTING YOURSELF AGAINST LOSS - TIPS TO HELP YOU

Q. I still like my neighbor even though he's suing me. The other day I was burning leaves in my backyard and the fire spread, damaging my neighbor's fence. Of course I'll pay, but I'd like to know just how my homeowners policy covers me in a case like this?

A. If your neighbor sues, your insurance company will defend you. They will investigate and determine to what extent, if any, you are legally responsible. In other words, your insurance company will assume any legal responsibility you may have incurred and will provide legal defense if necessary.
